

CALL FOR PAPERS

Dear friends and colleagues,

We've received a lot of interest in the PSi #22: 'Performance Climates' Call for Papers (below), and many proposals are rolling in that interpret the theme in provocative and inventive ways. We're excited to announce that in addition to the great speaker line-up, the conference will include a specially curated performance festival at Arts House Melbourne, featuring Marrugeku Theatre's 'Cut the Sky' and a series of commissioned performances, conversations and art/science collaborations. We'll also be joined in Melbourne by Spatula and Barcode, as part of their global 'Foodways' project.

In response to emails from people still planning their proposals, we're extending the submission deadline until December 18th. Please be reminded that we're open to individual papers, curated panels, and performative presentations (albeit with some resource limitations). We're interested in conversations between and across disciplines, and seek a wide variety of perspectives on our conference themes.

Do feel free to contact us on contact@psi2016.com for any further details.

Hoping to see you in Melbourne,

Eddie Paterson,

On behalf of the PSi #22: Performance Climates organizing committee.
